PROBLEM FIFTEEN: The Man and the Snow: Before having breakfast and getting dressed to leave for work a man went out to his driveway to start his car. It was a cold winter day and there had already been some early snow fall. He wanted the car to warm up, and allow time for the defroster to clear the ice off the windshield. After breakfast he looked out his window to check the weather and quickly realized that it had snowed rather heavily during his breakfast. He realized his car was almost buried in snow. He then called his office to let them know he might be late for work and finished his last cup of hot chocolate. He then proceeded to walk outside slowly working his way along the sidewalk to his car. He was able to enter his car without leaving any footprints in the snow that had fallen.

How did he accomplish this?
