45. A Cookie By Any Other Name

Jack had been dating Sally for almost a year and was hoping the relationship would develop into a more physical one. Sally at this point in the relationship saw them as friends and was not interested in becoming closer to Jack physically. In order to encourage her to become more involved, Jack brought some chocolate chip cookies to Sally's apartment because he knew they were her favorite. Jack had put a drug (thought to be a sexually stimulating drug) into the cookie hoping it would make her more receptive to his advances. Instead of arousing her when she ate the cookie, Sally became very ill. She later discovered the tampering with the cookie, called the police and filed a charge of assault against Jack.

Is Jack guilty of assault for tampering with the cookies?

How do you think the case should have been decided?
