Name: _____ Period: _____ Row: _____ Date: _____

PROBLEM ELEVEN: The Blood Test: When a very wealthy English aristocrat passed away two men both claimed to be the son and heir to the great fortune. It was well known that the English aristocrat's son had left home at an early age and had not been seen in over thirty years. The lawyer of the estate proposed a simple blood test to determine the true identity of the missing heir based on some early medical records of the son before he disappeared. The first man refused to take the test for medical reasons and the other man readily agreed to take the test. The lawyer quickly informed the second man that the fortune was not his because he was the imposter. How did he know this to be true?
